I know that my kids enjoy a book when they ask me to read it again immediately after I read it for the first time. While most other books they have are bright and colorful, the black and white illustrations in this book definitely caught their attention. My 5-year-old grasped most of the ideas in the book, while I had to simplify them a bit for my 3.5-year-old. The book is not long winded, so it sparks more questions and conversation about the topic and we have enjoyed pointing out all the different things we see around us that Allah created and reminds us that He is all around us.

I was so excited about the release of the third book in this series as I completely loved the first two. Even as an adult I enjoy these books. I love the black and white drawings. Reminds me of "The Book With No Pictures". Pictures or colors are not necessary for a great book to captivate kids. I love how this series, including this book, encourages children to reflect on the world around them and how that encourages their faith in God.

Kinda confusing for my 4 year old. He started crying at one point. Nice illustrations. And there are few books like it around, so for that I value it. We have read it with my son several times, and the message seemed to get more clear. It's a hard concept for children to understand, but I think this is a unique book that tries to tackle the issue.
